New Charges Are Lodged Against Attorney Cannon

(By Associated Press)

Milwaukee, Wis., Feb. 6—Raymond J. Cannon, attorney, surrendered himself and gave bail late Monday on a second indictment returned against him by the county grand jury.

The second true bill charges that Mr. Cannon obtained money on false pretenses in two cases in which he was retained as attorney.

Allege Extortion

In one case he is alleged to have told his client that charges against him were raised from contributing to the delinquency of a minor girl to a much more serious charge, and thereby to have obtained $400 retaining fee and $100 on the pretense that he could keep the story out of the newspapers, the true bill declared.

The second case was that of Frank Demerall who was accused of an offense against Zeronia Peplinski. Mr. Cannon told his client, according to the information, that he must pay $500 more to cover the serious charges that had been lodged against him.

Mr. Cannon was indicted last Friday on charges of attempting to bribe former District Attorney Winfred Zabel with a case of champaigne.

TAX BILLS WILL GET HEARING BY END OF FEBRUARY

WITH ONLY ONE MORE WEEK FOR INTRODUCING BILLS, PROSPECTS OF SHORT SESSION GROW BRIGHTER

Madison, Wis., Feb. 6—Public hearings on tax bills before the legislature will be held during the last week of this month if the finance committee is able to complete its hearings on departmental budgets before that time, it was announced today by Senator H. J. Severson and Speaker John L. Dahl, of the assembly, authors of the two principal revenue measures.

Senator Severson expects that his bill along with that of Speaker Dahl can be scheduled February 28. One of the largest legislative hearings in the history of the state is looked for when the bills come before the committee. Several days will be taken up hearing interested parties tell of the probable effect of the measures should they be enacted into law.

Will Report Bills

The joint finance committee reports that it can complete its hearings on departmental budgets within the next two weeks. After that time, bills covering the committee's estimate of state finance needs will be reported out for action.

Only one more week remains for introduction of bills in either house from the floor. After February 14, the time limit of bill introduction expires and from then on only committees may bring in new measures, unless unanimous consent to introduction is obtained from the house by a member. Up to the present scarcely 300 bills have been offered, indicating that the total number will be much smaller than in previous sessions.

Expect Quick Action

While the session has dragged through its first month, leaders believe that committees will soon be functioning efficiently and that by pushing the legislative program, adjournment may be taken in May. The important bills of the session are already introduced and ready for public hearing and consideration by the legislature.

NEW CORPORATION WILL ADVERTISE DAIRY PRODUCTS

ADEQUATE RENUMERATION FOR PRODUCER AND DEVELOPMENT OF INDUSTRY AIMS OF "DAIRYING INCORPORATED."

Wisconsin dairy products will be advertised throughout the United States if the program adopted by 2,000 Badger dairymen at Madison last week is carried through successfully. By a unanimous vote of the dairy farmers and cheese factory and creamery men present at the big meeting, a corporation to be known as "Wisconsin Dairying, Inc." was organized for the purpose of improving and standardizing the quality of Wisconsin's dairy products and of advertising them throughout the nation, with the expectation that farmers and manufacturers alike will thus be enabled to secure better prices for their products.

Seek No Profits

The corporation will be organized without stock and without profits, and the officers and directors will all serve without pay with the exception of the general secretary. Financing will be through membership fees to be paid for the years 1923 and 1924 by the dairymen and bankers who join the association. Dairymen will pay an annual fee equal to the value of one average day's milk during the month of June. Bankers will pay one tenth of one percent of the capital stock of their institution. Application cards will be in the hands of Wisconsin Rapids and Wood county banks before the end of the week, and may be obtained by all dairymen wishing to give their support to the organization.

The intention of the new organization is to initiate proper educational measures in the manufacture of dairy products in the state and to standardize as far as possible the quality of these products. It is planned to distribute information to farmers to point out to them the increased prices available for better farm products, and to actually develop proper markets for such products. It has been authoritatively stated that as much as five cents per pound over and above the extras market can be obtained for butter which will score from 95 to 97.

Problem for Centralizers

Approximately fifty percent of the total butter output in Wisconsin is manufactured by cooperative and local creameries which are best situated to manufacture a 95 score product because of their ability to obtain sweet cream daily from the farmers in their teritory. Centralizers on the other hand have so far been able to obtain only sour cream, and are able to command at best only the "extras" market with a product that scores around 91 points.

It is the farmer who hauls sour cream to the receiving stations of the centralizer who most needs to be taught that a little care and prompter methods of delivery to such station of sweet cream, will result in an additional price to him.

In point of state competition for dairy honors in America, Minnesota through the judicious use of advertising, has in the last few years developed tremendously along the lines of better dairy products and today ranks with Wisconsin in many respects. It was intimated on several occasions at the meeting in Madison that with another year of advertising, iMnnesota will easily leave Wisconsin trailing a poor second unless this state also takes advantages of its opportunities as a dairy state.

The intention of the new organization is to initiate proper educational measures in the manufacture of dairy products in the state and to standardize as far as possible the quality of these products. It is planned to distribute information to farmers to point out to them the increased prices available for better farm products, and to actually develop proper markets for such products. It has been authoritatively stated that as much as five cents per pound over and above the extras market can be obtained for butter which will score from 95 to 97.

Problem for Centralizers

Approximately fifty percent of the total butter output in Wisconsin is manufactured by cooperative and local creameries which are best situated to manufacture a 95 score product because of their ability to obtain sweet cream daily from the farmers in their teritory. Centralizers on the other hand have so far been able to obtain only sour cream, and are able to command at best only the "extras" market with a product that scores around 91 points.

It is the farmer who hauls sour cream to the receiving stations of the centralizer who most needs to be taught that a little care and prompter methods of delivery to such station of sweet cream, will result in an additional price to him.

In point of state competition for dairy honors in America, Minnesota, through the judicious use of advertising, has in the last few years developed tremendously along the lines of better dairy products and today ranks with Wisconsin in many respects. It was intimated on several occasions at the meeting in Madison that with another year of advertising, jMnnesota will easily leave Wisconsin trailing a poor second unless this state also takes advantages of its opportunities as a dairy state.

Asks Year's Extension Of Soldier Bonus Law

Madison, Wis.,—An extension of the time limit set by the Wisconsin bonus law for one year or until February 1, 1924, was asked in a bill introduced in the lower house of the Wisconsin legislature today by Assemblyman Ethan B. Minier, New Richmond.

"The amendment of the statute will not mean any extra expense to the state," Mr. Minier stated, "as the money is collected and available. Many Legion posts and veterans throughout the state have been unable to take advantage of the provisions of the act by the time limit as previously set and this amendment merely lengthens that time one year so that no deserving person will lose out on the advantages of the act."

THE PAVING PROGRAM

The people of Wisconsin Rapids don't have to be educated to the value of paved streets and highways. Experience has taught them that such improvements are invariably worth more than they cost, and sentiment seems almost unanimous in favor of pushing ahead with the program that has already given the city a fairly complete system of hard surfaced streets.

It is important that progress along this line be maintained. The county has built concrete highways to our doors on almost every side, and if these highways are to be of maximum benefit to Wisconsin Rapids they should connect directly with the paved streets of the city. We don't want tourists passing through or farmers coming to town to be let down with a bump when they strike our city limits. That sort of stuff is poor advertising for a town and does almost more than anything else to put a sour taste in the mouths of visitors.

Therefore when the city council meets this evening to consider the paving program for the year, it is to be hoped that sentiment will be unanimously in favor of the paving of Grand avenue, of the gap on Second avenue south, and of the Sigel road project. That is a minimum that should be carried to completion without delay.

There is one other approach to the city that also deserves immediate attention. That is the section of Twelfth street north and Baker street that connects the paved streets of the city with the Plover road. Practically all of the traffic from the east, including the heavy volume between this city and Stevens Point, comes in over that approach, and it should be maintained in the best possible condition. Sewer and water repairs and installations have already torn up Twelfth street, and will force the tearing up of Baker street this summer, thus affording an excellent opportunity for laying the paving.

FEDERAL INCOME TAX FACTS

No. 8.

A person may receive for his services compensation other than money that is subject to the income tax. The fair market value of the thing taken in payment is the amount to be included as income. For example, if a clerk in a grocery store receives as part of his wages groceries or provisions the value of the merchandise must be reported by him as income. Compensation paid an employee of a corporation in shares of stock is to be treated as if the corporation sold the stock for its market value and paid him in cash.

Promissory notes received in payment for services and not merely as security for payment constitute income to the amount of their fair market value. A taxpayer receiving as compensation a note good for its face value at maturity, but not bearing interest may treat as income as of the time of receipt the fair discounted value of the note at such time. If the payments are met as they become due, there should be included as income in respect to each such payment so much thereof as represents recovery for the discount deducted.

Board and lodging when furnished as compensation for services must be reported as income. Thus, a hotel clerk who is given a room and meals as part payment for his services must report the fair value of such in his income tax return.

Under regulations of the Public Health Service officers are entitled to quarters, light, and heat, and employees such as attendants, dietitians, interns, nurses, and reconstruction aides are entitled to quarters, subsistence, and laundry. The value of such constitutes income to the officers and employees, and must be returned by them as income for the year in which received.

Editor of Tribune,

Dear Sir: The following protest should naturally go direct to the management of the basket ball games that are played at the Amusement Hall, but there are so many people of the same opinion as myself that it seems to me will serve the purpose better perhaps to air the grievance through the columns of our city paper.

It seems to have become a very necessary thing for those who are addicted to the use of tobacco and especially the cigaret to smoke practically all the time except when they are asleep. Be it far from me to say or do any thing to interfere with any man's habits or ideas or so-called personal liberty, so long as these habits and ideas do not interfere with me. It is a personal matter with each individual whether he wants to make a smoke house of his mouth and lungs and a chimney of his nose, but when the people have to be afflicted with the tobacco smoke nuisance at the ball games at the Amusement Hall that is different and has got beyond a personal liberty matter. I have attended every game but one played here by the Tri-Cities and paid for same, and I am taking this method of registering a kick because smoking is allowed in the hall. During the progress of some of the games early in the season it was all but impossible to recognize the players because the air was blue with tobacco smoke. Some people who do not think it is fair to have to watch a game through a haze of tobacco smoke, made a complaint, and for a few games I am glad to say, Mr. Ragan enforced the "No Smoking" rule. Lately, however, very little attention is paid to the rule either by people who want to smoke or by the management. It would seem that it surely cannot work a very great hardship to those who must smoke to get along an hour or two without, especially when there are a goodly number of women in the spectators, regardless of the men who do not use tobacco, and that fact it would seem, should have a tendency to keep men from smoking, but it does not. Now a days a large percent of women everywhere seem to think it is perfectly all right for men to smoke anywhere and everywhere, and men who do don't use tobacco are beginning to be looked upon as freaks. I am glad that I am one of the Freaks.

It is not fair that people should pay their money to see the ball games as so many of us do who never miss a game—and be obliged to sit or stand through a haze of tobacco smoke and go away dizzy and fairly saturated. This letter is written in the kindliest feeling possible, and for the best interests of all concerned. I believe the players themselves can do better work the same as every man can, free from tobacco smoke.

Point Farmer Reports Huge Sales Of Cream

Stevens Point—The bumper cream checks being received by Matt Domaszek, Portage county farmer in the town of New Hope, continue to attract the interest of all dairymen of central Wisconsin.

Mr. Domaszek, who was paid $523.32 for cream delivered in December, holds the prize for receiving the largest cream check ever written by the Nelsonville creamery. He went to the top in November when he received a check for $490 and ten the next month beat his own high record.

M. E. Moe, another farmer who delivered cream to the Nelsonville creamery received a check totaling $392.35. Other large patrons of the creamery and the amount each received are: Edward Hotvedt, $201.18; J. Clementson, $200.45; William Loberg, $188.43; L. E. Gordon, Jr., $180.80; Nick Plankowski, $177.14; George E. Larson, $175.56; John Repinski $169.49; H. J. Krogwold, $164.64; C. Rustad, $152.13, and Otis Olson, $150.67.

The big checks Mr. Domaszek is receiving has aroused the interest of farmers from far and near and inquires have been pourng in as to his methods of feeding. The profits farmers in the New Hope vicinity are receiving is credited here to good feeding, good herds and care in handling and feeding the stock under especially adapted farm conditions. Farmers everywhere in this vicinity are being urged to enter dairying more extensively.

REGINALD McKENNA, head of the largest bank in the world, says that "Splendid isolation is a dream;" a truth which every industrial leader accepts as axiomatic. Had he substituted monopoly for isolation he would have expressed another self-evident truth which would have been acclaimed by every man who has given serious thought to the development of business on a large scale.

The Standard Oil Company (Indiana) is a big business striving to do a big job in a big way, yet no thought is given to achieving a monopoly: for those who direct the Company's activities know that in any basic industry such an ambition is impossible of fulfillment. Competition is welcome, for no single organization can hope to serve the people of the Middle West with petroleum products as they should be served. The Standard Oil Company (Indiana) enjoys a large volume of business and is satisfied to let this volume take care of its profits.

There is a reciprocal bond between every great industrial organization and the social environment in which it operates. An organization is truly great only when the service it renders is great.

The Standard Oil Company (Indiana) is in daily contact with a community of about 30 million people.

It serves them through a host of useful products refined from petroleum. Through these products it touches the home and industrial life of the people. It enters the sick chamber with mineral oil and petroleum jelly. It enters the factory, the roundhouse, and the farmyard with lubricating oils for machines, engines, and tractors. It seeks the farm home with gasoline, kerosene, candles and parowax. It touches the railroad right of way with Fornite Long Time Burner Oil for signal lamps; it supplies thousands of public and private garages with gasoline and lubricants. It feeds the furnaces of homes and factories with Stanolind Furnace Oil. It goes to the hospital with Stanolind Surgical Wax. It paves the streets with Stanolind Paving Asphalt.

These are but a few of the avenues of service which the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) maintains. To keep these avenues open the Company operates 1700 service stations, 3900 bulk stations, 7000 tank wagons serving thousands of garages, and 6 great refineries to supply their needs.

Thus does the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) acknowledge its reciprocal bond, and by creating a host of useful, essential products from a single basic raw material—crude petroleum—justify its claim to master craftsmanship in industrial husbandry.

There is a reciprocal bond between every great industrial organization and the social environment in which it operates. An organization is truly great only when the service it renders is great.

The Standard Oil Company (Indiana) is in daily contact with a community of about 30 million people.

It serves them through a host of useful products refined from petroleum. Through these products it touches the home and industrial life of the people. It enters the sick chamber with mineral oil and petroleum jelly. It enters the factory, the roundhouse, and the farmyard with lubricating oils for machines, engines, and tractors. It seeks the farm home with gasoline, kerosene, candles and parowax. It touches the railroad right of way with Fortnite Long Time Burner Oil for signal lamps; it supplies thousands of public and private garages with gasoline and lubricants. It feeds the furnaces of homes and factories with Stanolind Furnace Oil. It goes to the hospital with Stanolind Surgical Wax. It paves the streets with Stanolind Paving Asphalt.

These are but a few of the avenues of service which the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) maintains. To keep these avenues open the Company operates 1700 service stations, 3900 bulk stations, 7000 tank wagons serving thousands of garages, and 6 great refineries to supply their needs.

Thus does the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) acknowledge its reciprocal bond, and by creating a host of useful, essential products from a single basic raw material—crude petroleum—justify its claim to master craftsmanship in industrial husbandry.

Recipes By Miss Hinkley At The Tribune Cooking School

Below are the recipes given out by Miss Elsie Hinkley, director of the Tribune Free Cooking School which was opened this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Moose Hall on Grand Avenue. The opening session was attended by a large number of women from the city and community, who were surprised to discover such a splendidly arranged modern kitchen placed upon the stage in the hall.

Lead by Experts

The cooking school is lead by Miss Elsie Hinkley, graduate of home economic course of Lewis Institute Chicago and is assisted by Miss Pauline Farr, graduate of Stout Institute of Menominee. The whole school is free to every woman in this city and county. No goods are sold and all are invited. Local institutions have cooperated to make it a success and it merits a wide attendance.

DEEP FAT FRYING

Foods fried in deep fat are more healthful than those that are sauted. Do not allow Mazola to smoke as it is hot enough for deep fat frying before it begins to smoke. Drop a piece of the food to be fried into the hot fat; if ready for frying, the food will rise to the top almost instantly. After using, cool and quired. Dough should be handled as move any small particles that may have dropped off during frying. It may then be used for any desired purpose, as Mazola does not absorb the flavor of foods cooked in it.

DOUGHNUTS

2 eggs
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon mace (or nutmeg)
4 tablespoons Mazola
1 cup sour milk or buttermilk
About 4½ to 5 cups flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½teaspoon soda

Mix together first five ingredients. Add milk and stir until sugar is partially dissolved. Sift in dry ingredients all at once and work quickly into soft dough. Use 4-½ cups flour, measured after sifting. After adding this amount, little more may be required. Dough should be handled as soft as possible. Roll out on slightly floured board, cut and fry in deep, hot Mazola.

SWEET MILK DOUGHNUTS

Use 1 cup sweet milk instead of buttermilk or sour milk, omit soda and add 2 teaspoons baking powder making three altogether.

FRITTERS

1 cup flour
½ teaspoon salt
2 eggs
1 tablespoon Mazola
½ cup milk
1 teaspoon baking powder

Sift dry ingredients. Add eggs unbeaten with Mazola and milk and stir until well blended. Drop by spoonful into hot Mazola. Fry until golden brown. Serve with Maple Karo.

CORN FRITTERS

For corn fritters, use recipe for plain fritters, leaving out milk and adding ¾ cup corn pulp, canned or cut from cob after being cooked. It is sometimes necessary to add a little more milk to make the batter of correct consistency.

APPLE FRITTERS

For apple fritters, use same recipe as for plain fritters, adding ½ cup

Recipes By Miss Hinkley At The Tribune Cooking School

Below are the recipes given out by Miss Elsie Hinkley, director of the Tribune Free Cooking School which was opened this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Moose Hall on Grand Avenue. The opening session was attended by a large number of women from the city and community, who were surprised to discover such a splendidly arranged modern kitchen placed upon the stage in the hall.

Lead by Experts

The cooking school is lead by Miss Elsie Hinkley, graduate of home economic course of Lewis Institute Chicago and is assisted by Miss Pauline Farr, graduate of Stout Institute of Menominee. The whole school is free to every woman in this city and county. No goods are sold and all are invited. Local institutions have cooperated to make it a success and it merits a wide attendance.

DEEP FAT FRYING

Foods fried in deep fat are more healthful than those that are sauted. Do not allow Mazola to smoke as it is hot enough for deep fat frying before it begins to smoke. Drop a piece of the food to be fried into the hot fat; if ready for frying, the food will rise to the top almost instantly. After using, cool and quired. Dough should be handled as move any small particles that may have dropped off during frying. It may then be used for any desired purpose, as Mazola does not absorb the flavor of foods cooked in it.

DOUGHNUTS

2 eggs
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon mace (or nutmeg)
4 tablespoons Mazola
1 cup sour milk or buttermilk
About 4½ to 5 cups flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon soda

Mix together first five ingredients. Add milk and stir until sugar is partially dissolved. Sift in dry ingredients all at once and work quickly into soft dough. Uuse 4-½ cups flour, measured after sifting. After adding this amount, little more may be required. Dough should be handled as soft as possible. Roll out on slightly floured board, cut and fry in deep, hot Mazola.

SWEET MILK DOUGHNUTS

Use 1 cup sweet milk instead of buttermilk or sour milk, omit soda and add 2 teaspoons baking powder making three altogether.

FRITTERS

1 cup flour
½ teaspoon salt
2 eggs
1 tablespoon Mazola
½ cup milk
1 teaspoon baking powder

Sift dry ingredients. Add eggs unbeaten with Mazola and milk and stir until well blended. Drop by spoonful into hot Mazola. Fry until golden brown. Serve with Maple Karo.

CORN FRITTERS

For corn fritters, use recipe for plain fritters, leaving out milk and adding ¾ cup corn pulp, canned or cut from cob after being cooked. It is sometimes necessary to add a little more milk to make the batter of correct consistency.

APPLE FRITTERS

For apple fritters, use same recipe as for plain fritters, adding ¼ cup

Experts in Domestic Science will convince you about Mazola

Our expert lecturer, Miss Elsie Hinkley, will be at The Cooking School tomorrow. Step in and let her prove to you the remarkable facts about Mazola. You could not spend an hour more profitable. Women's clubs, teachers' organizations, and high school domestic science classes are especially invited. Bring pad and pencil and take notes during the lecture.

For many years you have been hearing about the remarkable economy of Mazola—how it can be used for every cooking and salad purpose. More than seven million American women have proved, over and over again, that Mazola is richer and much more economical than butter in shortening for cake, pie crust and pastry. For Mazola is a 100% pure vegetable oil, and contains absolutely no water—as do butter and lard.

It is better than lard or ordinary cooking fats. Mazola never takes up flavors or odors—nor carries flavors or odors from one food to another. This is because it is heated to a higher temperature without smoking or burning than other cooking fats that the surfaces of the food are crusted over, and rich juices are kept in.

This is why Mazola can be used over—until the last drop is gone—even after frying fish or onions. All you have to do is to strain it. Then you can use it for shortening the most delicate cake.

Many Italian and French people who know the taste of good salad oil, prefer Mazola, even to the highest priced imported olive oil—it is so sweet and wholesome.

Mexico City.—Lovers of golf here are to have a new pasture in which to pursue their pleasure. A new country club has been organized, rivalling the old Churubusco Club, which was founded in the days before the revolution, and was considered one of the finest in Latin-America. The Churubusco club house has been remodeled and society in great numbers has been flocking to it. The new club is closer to the city, and already enough members have joined to assure its success.

These strangers came in unostentatiously and stood in a bunch, somewhat close together. There were nine of them,all clad in good garments, the best that money could buy in a wider market than the rangeland owned. Their soft fine boots were very wide and ornamented with much silver after the fashion of their kind across the line.

They stood quietly and watched the dancers and in their midst stood one who was of a different mold. Tall slim, fine of feature and form, smiling, his reckless face a-sparkle with the joy of youth in music and motion, this man was not so guardedly alert, and he carried his hat in his hand. Thick black hair waved back from a handsome brow, white with the bleach of the sweatband, sign manual of him who rides much in the open.

His blue eyes under their black lashes roved over the dancers with a bright bold glance.

As the couples drifted out again Lolo Sanchez, a living flower in her black and scarlet came down the room in the arms of a big blond boy, her small face upturned, her coquette's heart playing the old game in her dusky eyes.

And then—the boy swung her past the door and she looked up full into the smiling face of the stranger.

"Velantrie!" she breathed to herself.

"What?" asked the boy, but she did not hear.

From that moment she forgot him utterly.

When the dance ended Lolo stopped, as if by accident—something about the tiny slipper that encased her light foot—bent and straightened it—close by the door. As she rose, quick as a willow wand released, she looked into Velantrie's eyes and her own were eloquent.

"Master!" she murmured in Spanish so low that none but he caught the soft word.

"Who's th' chap by th' door?" the blond boy asked suspiciously but Lolo looked up innocently.

"Which one?" she asked and the suspicion died.

The newcomers did not dance. They had come because Velantrie gave the word because he chose to look upon Santa Leandra at her merrymaking and that was all.

Velantrie did not dance either. There was no one whom he knew upon the floor save and except the small girl who called him master, and he only smiled with amusement as he watched her.

But Lolo Sanchez's quick little brain was working and she meant to change that very soon. Therefore she sent the least of her followers, a meek brown Mexican, unnoticable in the crowd, to whisper something in the fiddler's ear.

And then the music stopped, the crowds drifted to the benches, and the fiddler was tuning his fiddle to another key.

He tucked the fiddle in his neck and began abruptly to play—and no one called this number.

Wild, swift, beautiful music it was, Spanish to the core.

It lilted and swung and at regular intervals there came a thrum of the bass that sounded like the stroke of a foot upon the floor. And then, softly, swiftly, like a leaf before a wind, Lolo Sanchez came drifting down the flooor alone. From somewhere as if by magic she had drawn a pair of castanets, and these began to snap and click as her hands rose above her head.

Ah, she was a beautiful thing! Young, slim, small, graceful as a gazalle, her lithe body bent and swayed, whirled and dipped and circled, like a flame in the breeze.

Stamp—whirl—bend—hands waving, castanets clicking she went down the long room, circled its farther end and came drifting up along the other side. Necks were craned, feed drawn back to give her room, for she was dancing close. And then, suddenly it seemed, she was opposite Velantrie where he stood beside the door.

Out of the center she went as if she spured the crowd, then swift as a winged thing she darted toward him, threw back her little head, smiled straight in his eyes and held out her hands, palms up.

It was a challenge, direct, daring, pretty.

For one second the man hesitated.

Then he tossed his broad hat to those behind, sprand forward and caught outstretched hands.

Lolo's eyes were liquid light as she drew him into the clear, snatched her hands away, tossed them above her head and began to dance in ernest. The stranger, too began to dance, and those who watched saw instantly that the girl had made no false choice of partners. He placed a hand on his belted hip, raised the other to touch her clicking fingers now and again, and he, too, swayed and dipped and circled, though in a lesser fashion, to give background to her brilliance, the subtle and perfect accompaniment to a wonderful performance.

Lolo was a rose in the night, a wind in the twilight, a laugh and a jest and a challenge, Velantrie, the stranger, was a young tree in a storm, a cloud hard blown by winds, and the thunder of his booted heels rolled under the lightning of the castanets.

"Great snakes!" said Perly, softly, "ain't that amazin'?"

He spoke to nobody in particular, but the blond boy who stood beside him cleared his throat as if with an effort and Val Hannon on the other side glanced up. The boy's face was pale as milk and his blue eyes were narrowed to cold points.

Down the room and back again went the two. Lolo was all about Velantre, coaxing, spuring, challenging, and all the while her little face was full of light that shone for all to see.

As if by artless chance she drew the figure gracefully toward the far side of the floor, directly before the blond boy, and she was utterly irresistable. Butterflies in the breeze, stars that glittered, fires at night—she was all of them, and men's pulses throbbed drunkenly to behold her.

And then as the music rose to one last keening, she fled straight to Velantre; sank backward in his reaching arm, and held up her flower face toward him, unmistakable in its intent, its invitation.

Half under her spell the man hesitated a fraction of a second. The perfect action of the steps and the music lost its first beat in that second's wait. Lolo's face glowed deeper—and Velantre bent.

"By—!" came a choking whisper as the blond boy, gray as ashes and cold, reached to his hip.

There was a flash of metal, a step forward—and in that second Val Hannon beside him dropped a lightning-quick hand on his shoulder and swung him round in action—as she hand so often swung her dad. There was an oath a shot that went wild and landed in Hunnewell's tray on the platform's edge across the room, and Velantrie, arrested halfway to Lolo's siren lips, looked straight past the boy and into the blazing black eyes of the girl who had saved his life.

For one sharp moment the tension held.

Then Valentrie slowly straightened up and Lolo slipped from his arm, forgotten as she had forgotten the blond boy. He stood still, breathing hard, his blue eyes fastened on Val's face, a frown between them.

From all sides men crowded in, pushed between and hustled the boy away, while from that other side of the room Velantrie's followers came like a bolt, solid packed, their faces aflame and keen, their hands on their guns, ready.

"Steady, boys," said Valentrie, "there's nothing wrong."

Then he made one stride to Val, reached out a hand and smiled. It was the brilliant lighting of his face, like fire behind a curtain, that was his chiefest charm.

"I've had many a close call," he said simply, "and have done some sharp tricks to beat them myself, but I never saw a prettier piece of work than that. The quick thought, the quick action—they were like a man, a keen man, used to desperate chances, and I never saw a woman before who could think and act like that. If you know me," he finished frankly, "perhaps you would not take my hand. But I want to thank you."

Gravely Val looked full into his brilliant eyes. The light and the laughter of the earlier night were gone from her face, why she could not have told to save her life, yet it was not because of the near tragedy, that she knew.

"Yes," she said as simply, "I will take your hand."

And her firm brown fingers closed around his in a strong clasp. The smile died on the man's face and he looked into hers for another long moment.

Then he loosed her hand and turned away.

"I shall not forget," he said.

Instantly his men closed about him, they marched across the floor among the crowd which fell back from them, filed compactly out the door and were gone.

The celebration was over in Santa Leandra. Dim shapes rode through the dust and cool starlight that presaged the dawn, and the denizens of the rangeland scattered for another year.

It was mid-morning when they rode into Paradise, and far off Val shaded her eyes with her hand and searched the familiar place.

"Boys," she said at last, "there's something wrong at home. The riders are all in and hanging round the corrals. There's dad—he's waiting for us."

There was something wrong at Paradise, indeed.

John Hannon met them at the corner of the great house and his face bore signs of strain. His dark eyes were cold and narrow.

NEWSPAPER ARCHIVE®

These strangers came in unostentatiously and stood in a bunch, somewhat close together. There were nine of them,all clad in good garments, the best that money could buy in a wider market than the rangeland owned. Their soft fine boots were very wide and ornamented with much silver after the fashion of their kind across the line.

They stood quietly and watched the dancers and in their midst stood one who was of a different mold. Tall slim, fine of feature and form, smiling, his reckless face a-sparkle with the joy of youth in music and motion, this man was not so guardedly alert, and he carried his hat in his hand. Thick black hair waved back from a handsome brow, white with the bleach of the sweatband, sign manual of him who rides much in the open.

His blue eyes under their black lashes roved over the dancers with a bright bold glance.

As the couples drifted out again Lolo Sanchez, a living flower in her black and scarlet came down the room in the arms of a big blond boy, her small face upturned, her coquette's heart playing the old game in her dusky eyes.

And then—the boy swung her past the door and she looked up full into the smiling face of the stranger.

"Velantrie!" she breathed to herself.

"What?" asked the boy, but she did not hear.

From that moment she forgot him utterly.

When the dance ended Lolo stopped, as if by accident—something about the tiny slipper that encased her light foot—bent and straightened it—close by the door. As she rose, quick as a willow wand released, she looked into Velantrie's eyes and her own were eloquent.

"Master!" she murmured in Spanish so low that none but he caught the soft word.

"Who's th' chap by th' door?" the blond boy asked suspiciously but Lolo looked up innocently.

"Which one?" she asked and the suspicion died.

The newcomers did not dance. They had come because Velantrie gave the word because he chose to look upon Santa Leandra at her merrymaking and that was all.

Velantrie did not dance either. There was no one whom he knew upon the floor save and except the small girl who called him master, and he only smiled with amusement as he watched her.

But Lolo Sanchez's quick little brain was working and she meant to change that very soon. Therefore she sent the least of her followers, a meek brown Mexican, unnoticable in the crowd, to whisper something in the fiddler's ear.

And then the music stopped, the crowds drifted to the benches, and the fiddler was tuning his fiddle to another key.

He tucked the fiddle in his neck and began abruptly to play—and no one called this number.

Wild, swift, beautiful music it was, Spanish to the core.

It lilted and swung and at regular intervals there came a thrum of the bass that sounded like the stroke of a foot upon the floor. And then, softly, swiftly, like a leaf before a wind, Lolo Sanchez came drifting down the flooor alone. From somewhere as if by magic she had drawn a pair of castanets, and these began to snap and click as her hands rose above her head.

Ah, she was a beautiful thing! Young, slim, small, graceful as a gazalle, her lithe body bent and swayed, whirled and dipped and circled, like a flame in the breeze.

Stamp—whirl—bend—hands waving, castanets clicking she went down the long room, circled its farther end and came drifting up along the other side. Necks were craned, feed drawn back to give her room, for she was dancing close. And then, suddenly it seemed, she was opposite Velantrie where he stood beside the door.

Out of the center she went as if she spured the crowd, then swift as a winged thing she darted toward him, threw back her little head, smiled straight in his eyes and held out her hands, palms up.

It was a challenge, direct, daring, pretty.

For one second the man hesitated.

Then he tossed his broad hat to those behind, sprand forward and caught outstretched hands.

Lolo's eyes were liquid light as she drew him into the clear, snatched her hands away, tossed them above her head and began to dance in ernest. The stranger, too began to dance, and those who watched saw instantly that the girl had made no false choice of partners. He placed a hand on his belted hip, raised the other to touch her clicking fingers now and again, and he, too, swayed and dipped and circled, though in a lesser fashion, to give background to her brilliance, the subtle and perfect accompaniment to a wonderful performance.

Lolo was a rose in the night, a wind in the twilight, a laugh and a jest and a challenge, Velantre, the stranger, was a young tree in a storm, a cloud hard blown by winds, and the thunder of his booted heels rolled under the lightning of the castanets.

"Great snakes!" said Perly, softly, "ain't that amazin'?"

He spoke to nobody in particular, but the blond boy who stood beside him cleared his throat as if with an effort and Val Hannon on the other side glanced up. The boy's face was pale as milk and his blue eyes were narrowed to cold points.

Down the room and back again went the two. Lolo was all about Velantre, teasing, spuring, challenging, and all the while her little face was full of light that shone for all to see.

As if by artless chance she drew the figure gracefully toward the far side of the floor, directly before the blond boy, and she was utterly irresistable. Butterflies in the breeze, stars that glittered, fires at night—she was all of them, and men's pulses throbbed drunkenly to behold her.

And then as the music rose to one last keening, she fled straight to Velantre; sank backward in his reaching arms, and held up her flower face toward him, unmistakable in its intent, its invitation.

Half under her spell the man hesitated a fraction of a second. The perfect action of the steps and the music lost its first beat in that second's wait. Lolo's face glowed deeper—and Velantre bent.

"By—!" came a choking whisper as the blond boy, gray as ashes and cold, reached to his hip.

There was a flash of metal, a step forward—and in that second Val Hannon beside him dropped a lightning-quick hand on his shoulder and swung him round in action—as she hand so often swung her dad. There was an oath a shot that went wild and landed in Hunnewell's tray on the platform's edge across the room, and Velantrie, arrested halfway to Lolo's siren lips, looked straight past the boy and into the blazing black eyes of the girl who had saved his life.

For one sharp moment the tension held.

Then Valentrie slowly straightened up and Lolo slipped from his arm, forgotten as she had forgotten the blond boy. He stood still, breathing hard, his blue eyes fastened on Val's face, a frown between them.

From all sides men crowded in, pushed between and hustled the boy away, while from that other side of the room Velantrie's followers came like a bolt, solid packed, their faces aflame and keen, their hands on their guns, ready.

"Steady, boys," said Valentrie, "there's nothing wrong."

Then he made one stride to Val, reached out a hand and smiled. It was the brilliant lighting of his face, like fire behind a curtain, that was his chiefest charm.

"I've had many a close call," he said simply, "and have done some sharp tricks to beat them myself, but I never saw a prettier piece of work than that. The quick thought, the quick action—they were like a man, a keen man, used to desperate chances, and I never saw a woman before who could think and act like that. If you know me," he finished frankly, "perhaps you would not take my hand. But I want to thank you."

Gravely Val looked full into his brilliant eyes. The light and the laughter of the earlier night were gone from her face, why she could not have told to save her life, yet it was not because of the near tragedy, that she knew.

"Yes," she said as simply, "I will take your hand."

And her firm brown fingers closed around his in a strong clasp. The smile died on the man's face and he looked into hers for another long moment.

Then he loosed her hand and turned away.

"I shall not forget," he said.

Instantly his men closed about him, they marched across the floor among the crowd which fell back from them, filed compactly out the door and were gone.

The celebration was over in Santa Leandra. Dim shapes rode through the dust and cool starlight that presaged the dawn, and the denizens of the rangeland scattered for another year.

It was mid-morning when they rode into Paradise, and far off Val shaded her eyes with her hand and searched the familiar place.

"Boys," she said at last, "there's something wrong at home. The riders are all in and hanging round the corrals. There's dad—he's waiting for us."

COOKING SCHOOL

Moose Hall, Over Peerenboom's Store.
Director—Miss Hinkley Assistant—Miss Farr

Program for Wednesday

Lecture—Short Cuts in Cake Making.

Demonstrations—White Cake — Marshmallow Icing.

200 Women Attend Opening Session of Cooking School

"An unusually interesting meeting" was the verdict of Miss Elsie Hinkley, director of the Tribune Free Cooking School which opened this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Moose Hall on Grand avenue in a statement to the Tribune during the intermission at the first day's session. Over two hundred women were in attendance at the school this afternoon.

Program First

The school opened with an interesting program given by the Daly Music Co., using an Edison instrument. The program was played while the women filed into the hall and took seats.

Miss Hinkley and Miss Farr were introduced by a representative of the Tribune who turned the meeting over for the first session. Miss Hinkley opened with a brief sketch of the program for today and the remaining three days of the school.

Short Lecture

The director then referred to the interesting exhibits shown by the Staub Electric Shop, Jackson Milling Co., Wisconsin Valley Creamery Co., Central Wisconsin Electric Co., and the Prentiss-Wabers Stove Co. and also referred to the kitchen equipment. The white kitchen tables, Sellers Cabinet, white Crystal refrigerator and congoleum rug furnished by the J. R. Ragan furniture store, the breakfast set from the Johnson & Hill Co., to be used on Thursday at the dinner day session, splendid electric Westinghouse range furnished by Staub Electric Shop, the Red Star oil stove furnished by the Nash Hardware Co., and electrical appliances to be used from the Central Wisconsin Electric display. Miss Hinkley paid high tribute to the quality of local food products and all those furnished for her demonstrations. She then proceeded to give a short lecture of the success of cookery. She stressed three main points to follow in the preparation of cooked articles. They were: 1. Thorough knowledge of the foods to be used. 2. Accurate measurements in preparing recipes and the accurate use of heat, proper measurement. She then proceeded to make the demonstrations on the program for today which includes Fruit loaf, whole wheat date muffins, quick coffee cake, eight minute doughnuts, corn fritters and croquettes. Miss

Expect Larger Attendance

Monday's attendance exceeded Miss Hinkley's expectations and the Tribune has made preparations for the rearrangement of the chairs and additional seating space to accomodate the large number of women who will attend the second session which is to be held Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Moose hall. Every woman is invited and a full house is hoped for. No charge is made for anything. Farr assisted her in the demonstrations.

Is Attractive Place

The Moose Hall is an attractive place for the school. The arrangements of the booths and the arrangements of the stage and kitchen equipment is fine. The building was warm and comfortable.

The Blommer Ice Cream Co. will serve free bricks of ice cream at Wednesday's session which will be an added feature.

Pin boys on duty at the Wisconsn Elks State Bowling Tournament will have the busiest season of their lives commencing at four o'clock the afternoon of February 9 providing that the plans and expectations of sixteen local Elks do not go astray for this number of local pin smashers have signified their intentions of being on hand at that for the purpose of carrying away the lion's share of the honors.

With such able knights of the pins as Dr. Mortenson Charles Nash, Niel Nash, Roy Lovejoy, James Hamilton, J. P. Gruwell, O. Roenius, O. Uheling, F. Aldridge, William Schill, Frank Abel, J. Zabawa, Bert Smith, E. Hein, O. Labus and W. Drath it is thought that local "Bills" will give a good account of themselves when it comes their turn to uphold the prestige of the local lodge.

Teams Not Named

Owing to the fact that last minute difficulties may arise the committee in charge of the event decided that it was advisable to wait until their arrival in Appleton before naming the five men and double teams. Although sixteen have signified their intentions of making the trip it is thought that there may be openings for others as some who are now planning on the trip may be unable to attend, making it necesary to postpone the naming of the teams.

Good Fellowship Rewarded

The distribution of the prizes will be the same as past years, about 60 percent going to the participants making the best scores and 40 percent going to those individuals who are a trifle short on bowling skill but long on good fellowship.

Special railroad rates have been secured from the Western Passenger Association.

Co-op. Store At Nekoosa Closes Doors Yesterday

The Nekoosa Cooperative Exchange closed its store at Nekoosa last night pending a meeting Thursday of the stockholders, members of the American Cooperative Association, who will determine whether the shut-down will be permanent.

Widely circulated rumors that the store was going into bankruptcy were denied by H. O. Bass, manager, who stated today that the officers of the association controlling the store had merely decided to close it until a meeting of stockholders could be held to decide upon plans for the future.

The association which controls the store is composed of residents of Nekoosa and of the neighboring country. Officers of the association are: Edw. Kruger, Cranmoor, president; S. N. Program for Wednesday

Lecture—Short Cuts in Cake Making.

Demonstrations—White Cake — Marshmallow Icing.

200 Women Attend Opening Session of Cooking School

"An unusually interesting meeting" was the verdict of Miss Elsie Hinkley, director of the Tribune Free Cooking School which opened this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Moose Hall on Grand avenue in a statement to the Tribune during the intermission at the first day's session. Over two hundred women were in attendance at the school this afternoon.

Program First

The school opened with an interesting program given by the Daly Music Co., using an Edison instrument. The program was played while the women filed into the hall and took seats.

Miss Hinkley and Miss Farr were introduced by a representative of the Tribune who turned the meeting over for the first session. Miss Hinkley opened with a brief sketch of the program for today and the remaining three days of the school.

Short Lecture

The director then referred to the interesting exhibits shown by the Staub Electric Shop, Jackson Milling Co., Wisconsin Valley Creamery Co., Central Wisconsin Electric Co., and the Prentiss-Wabers Stove Co. and also referred to the kitchen equipment. The white kitchen tables, Sellers Cabinet, white Crystal refrigerator and congoleum rug furnished by the J. R. Ragan furniture store, the breakfast set from the Johnson & Hill Co., to be used on Thursday at the dinner day session, splendid electric Westinghouse range furnished by Staub Electric Shop, the Red Star oil stove furnished by the Nash Hardware Co., and electrical appliances to be used from the Central Wisconsin Electric display. Miss Hinkley paid high tribute to the quality of local food products and all those furnished for her demonstrations. She then proceeded to give a short lecture of the success of cookery. She stressed three main points to follow in the preparation of cooked articles. They were: 1. Thorough knowledge of the foods to be used. 2. Accurate measurements in preparing recipes and the accurate use of heat, proper measurement. She then proceeded to make the demonstrations on the program for today which includes Fruit loaf, whole wheat date mullins, quick coffee cake, eight minute doughnuts, corn fritters and croquettes. Miss

Expect Larger Attendance

Monday's attendance exceeded Miss Hinkley's expectations and the Tribune has made preparations for the rearrangement of the chairs and additional seating space to accomodate the large number of women who will attend the second session which is to be held Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Moose hall. Every woman is invited and a full house is hoped for. No charge is made for anything. Farr assisted her in the demonstrations.

Is Attractive Place

The Moose Hall is an attractive place for the school. The arrangements of the booths and the arrangements of the stage and kitchen equipment is fine. The building was warm and comfortable.

The Blommer Ice Cream Co. will serve free bricks of ice cream at Wednesday's session which will be an added feature.

Tri-Cities All Set For Game Tonight

Locals To Wipe Out Last Year's Defeat; Largest Crowd in History Expected To Be On Hand.

Judging from a press clipping taken from the Marshfield Daily News the basketball fans in our neighboring city are not as cocky over the final outcome of the basketball series between the two rival teams as they were sometime ago.

During the early part of the season the Marshfield fans, evidently still hilarious over the victories last year, could not see anything but victory in the battles for supremacy this season and were claiming the championship was as a good as won. That their confidence has been badly shaken may be pudged from the following clipping:

"No Walkaway"

Marshfield Company C basketeers will play at Wisconsin Rapids tomorrow in the first game of a series to determine which is the best team in Central Wisconsin this year.

Wisconsin Rapids fans have been doing a lot of shouting about the local team being "not so good," but with the new lineup for all remaining games of the season, namely, Pope, Wahl, Eaton, Nuhlicek, Huber, Fernando, Thom, should give most any team the stiffest kind of a battle.

Wisconsin Rapds will have Bill Smith of Appleton, for all games remaining, together with Ritchay, Puhler, Hill, Stark, LeRoux and Dijkz, a formidable aggregation.

The outcome of tomorrows tilt will be watched with interest and by looks of things it will be no walkaway for either team. It can be safely predicted there will not be many points difference in the final score—Marshfield Daily News.

Regardless of the driving snowstorm which threatens to tie up all highway traffic between this city and Marshfield it is expected that a huge delegation of Marshfield fans will be on hand to witness the opening struggle. Good train accommodations will make it possible for the rival fans to leave Marshfield in the afternoon and return on the late northwestern.

Expert Banner Crowd

With a large delegation from Marshfield coming, Manager Fred Ragan is making preparations to accommodate the largest crowd that has ever been in the amusement hall. It is confidently expected that no matter the weather conditions a great turnout of local fans will be on hand to yell themselves hoarse during the banner struggle of the year. In fact the sentiment of the city is expressed by the statement of a local fan who said:

"Anytime that the Tri-Cities and Marshfield play you can expect the hottest game of the year and for myself I'd crawl over three acres of broken beer bottles on my hands and knees if I had to do it in order to attend."

Tri-Cities Drill Daily

In order to get their teamwork down to the finest possible edge the Tri-Cities have been drilling regularly and with Bill Smith staying over to get into the team. Practice it is expected that the five will produce something in the way of a revelation when they take the floor against their old rivals. Although somewhat disappointed over the outcome of the final game against the Badgers the team has not lost heart and will stage the greatest battle of the year to wipe out Sunday's defeat and to secure the long sought for revenge for last years Marshfield victory on the local floor.

Because of the large delegation of woman fans Manager Fred Ragon has put a ban on smoking. The game will start at eight fifteen.

Don Dyer, one of the most prominent basketball officials in the Fox River Valley, has been secured to officiate at the game in this city tonight and at Marshfield Wednesday night.

Fast Preliminary

In the preliminary game Murphy's Specials will hook up with Dolan's Sure Shots in a conflict that promises to be full of action as both teams are claiming the city amateur championship. According to present dope the Sure Shots have felt slighted because of the attempt on the part of the Specials to claim the title and sought this game to prove that they are the rightful claimants to the title. Owing to the intense feeling it is expected that the first game will be a nip and tuck affair from beginning to end. This game will start at 7:30.

BOWLING

Three straight wins for the Highways over the Foundries strengthened the Road-Builders' grip on first place in the major league. The Normingtons in second place are now four full games behind the leaders, but are well ahead of the rest of the field. In the minor league the Buicks held their own, while the Murphies have not yet rolled their match with the First National Bank crew so the standings are still in doubt.

The chemistry department of the University of Washington, in seattle, has just perfected a blasting-powder that is said to be much superior to dynamite. It is composed of a mixture of wood sawdust and ammonium nitrate and costs only from 4 to 6 cents a pound to manufacture, whereas the ordinary dynamite products cost from 12 to 15 cents. The new product is non-freezing and slow acting, the latter quality being of particular value in stump blasting.

The Province of Alberta has set the minimum wage for women in all industries at $24 a week.

The chemistry department of the University of Washington, in seattle, has just perfected a blasting powder that is said to be much superior to dynamite. It is composed of a mixture of wood sawdust and ammonium nitrate and costs only from 4 to 6 cents a pound to manufacture, whereas the ordinary dynamite products cost from 12 to 15 cents. The new product is non-freezing and slow acting, the latter quality being of particular value in stump blasting.

Attention Farmers

Friday, February 2nd at Madison, there was organized by Wisconsin dairymen a non-stock and non-profit corporation to be known as "Wisconsin Dairymen, Inc.," which will have as its purpose the standardizing, labeling and marketing of Wisconsin dairy products. If successful, this new company will play an important part in obtaining higher prices for Wisconsin farm products. Much of its success depends upon the support given it by the farmers in the state. Details of the plan are obtainable at

Her Comfort - Your Style

-in the wonderful Arch Preserver Shoe

THE Indian maiden walked flat on her feet, in her soft, easy moccasins. She never had foot annoyance. She had "happy" feet—because they were supported underneath their whole length—Nature's plan! Today you can enjoy the foot comfort of the Indian maiden, and yet wear shoes that conform to the latest ideas of style. The ARCH PRESERVER SHOE gives the same result when wearing heels as when the foot is walking flat on the ground. It is for well feet—yet it affords relief for practically all ordinary foot troubles.

TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFFICE

"KEEPS THE FOOT WELL"

Unless this trade-mark appears it is not a genuine ARCH PRESERVER SHOE. The exclusive arch construction offers firm support for the foot during the entire life of the shoe and gives the shoe longer life. There is a "walking base" underneath the entire foot.

POPE—Another real star of state-wide reputation.

EATON—of Ripon College, who played with Marshfield last year and is now playing with Oshkosh and the Fond du Lac Cardinals.

HUBER—Whom we all know—Nuf said.

NUHLICEK—has scored more points for Marshfield this year than any other man.

The Tri-Cities have not forgotten last year, and no matter if Marshfield got the best players in the U. S. A., they are determined to win, and fight to the last second of play if necessary. This promises to be a real battle so come out and help defeat Marshfield.
